NOVEMBER UPDATE

I begin this update a couple of days shy of Tihar, the caboose of this month-long train of festivals and celebration. I hope to conclude it by Wednesday, Laxmi Puja, the pinnacle of the festival of light.

It is a day carefully prepared for by every household no matter how humble. Laxmi, the Goddess of Wealth will be guided into the home or business by a pathway of small candles beginning at a Mandela painted outside and culminating in the room where money is stored.

In my first few Tihars, candles were all that was used and its low flickering glow under lighting the faces of those gathered offered a reverential stillness and beauty to all. Now Christmas lights left on through the night drape many homes and businesses, and our pre-dawn walks, when there is power, are in a dazzle of blue and green energizing the otherwise gentleness that beckons before dawn. 27 STORIES

By Michael Triozzi

I returned to Nepal to manage the Nepal Orphans Home Boys' House for five weeks this summer. These ended up being five of the most enlightening weeks of my life. I had always loved hanging out with the boys -- playing with them on Saturdays, giving them high-fives on their way to school, cracking jokes with them at lunch -- but in a lot of ways, I had never really had the chance to get to know most of them as individuals before. Over the course of this summer, I learned how truly incredible each of them is.

When you live with someone, you slowly begin to learn their talents, interests and loves. It's the same thing when you live with 27 little brothers: you open 27 windows onto 27 unique and fascinating lives!

The first discovery occurred when the boys and I started playing chess after they finished their studies. I figured they wouldn't have had much practice with it, so I offered a prize to the first boy who could checkmate me. To my shock, Purna beat me almost immediately. During the next few weeks, Purna ended up winning two out of every three games we'd play. He's the kind of kid who's a bit of a goofball in class and often gets overlooked by his teachers, so you would never expect him to have such a deeply tactical mind.

Kamal came to me one day and said he wanted to try cooking a special meal for the rest of the boys. When we went out shopping for ingredients, he immediately took command, purchasing onions, flour, vegetables, butter -- all to fit his vision for this project. We ended up inviting all of the volunteers as well and enjoyed an amazing feast on the roof of the boys' house during sunset. Kamal now says he is considering a career as a professional chef.

Each of these boys has talents you wouldn't believe. Nama can dominate a basketball court like a Nepali LeBron James. Bimal can paint masterpieces and dance like a Bollywood star. Ram practices his singing every day and keeps a small radio that he can sing along with.

27 boys with 27 different stories, dreams, and talents. They are all worthy to face the challenges that life will put ahead of them. They each have a whole world inside of them.

FOOTBALL RULES AT PAPA'S HOUSE

By Alan David and Deb Norton

Papa's House scored a big goal when Baden Williams, a talented teenage Australian rules football player, visited to teach the children how to play Australia's most popular professional sport.

With Baden's help, the children learned all of the fundamental skills of the sport, including: kicking, marking, hand-balling and tackling. Soon enough, they were on the field playing practice games with Baden.

Unlike American football or rugby, Australian football is played on an oval-shaped court (and uses an oval-shaped football). And a goal can only be scored if the ball is kicked through the four goal posts.

Baden looks forward to a return visit to play more Australian football in Nepal.

Special thanks to the Australian Rules Football League (AFL) for donating 20 footballs, books and gear bags to NOH.

LIGHTS, CAMERA, NOH!

By Toni Thomson

Big news! We are very excited to announce that we are near completion of a documentary film about Michael Hess and the children of Nepal Orphans Home.

Filming began in 2007 when there were only 34 children. Now, 10 years after NOH first started, these incredible children have grown into empowered, poised and exceptional beings with the warmest hearts. The film, titled What it Takes to be Extraordinary, sheds light on many issues facing the children of Nepal. With the support of committed Nepali staff and volunteers from around the world, the film will showcase the far-reaching impact of NOH and the youth it serves.

For our friends in Toronto, Canada, there will be an exclusive screening of the documentary on Wednesday, Dec. 16, 2015.

The screening and fundraiser will be hosted by Possible Worlds, a long-time supporter of NOH. All proceeds will go directly to the children featured in the film.

Some of our NOH board members will also be present. We hope you can make it to this sneak peek of a truly inspirational story.

Get tickets here:

We will keep you posted on additional screenings in the U.S. and worldwide.

DOING A GOOD TURN FOR NEPAL

Katie Delsol, a long-time supporter of Volunteer Nepal, recently organized two Girl Scout meetings in Marin County, CA to teach the girls about compassion, disability and the importance of helping people who are unable to help themselves.

At the troop meetings, the Girl Scouts watched videos and discussed how they might be able to help children on the other side of the world, including the children of Gholadunga, a home for the blind in Nepal. The girls took a peek at what their lives would be like if they were blind. They created Braille signs, looked at Braille books and played blindfolded games to get a sense of how they might do things without any sight.

The Girl Scouts also donated clothing and toys to the Gholadunga home.
